SECOND RAID ON WILHELMSHAVEN AS VICTIM CLAIMS GNEISENAU

Special To The "Telegraph"

FOUNDED 1801

No. 15920

PARIS, SEPT. 7 (UP).-GERMANY'S BIGGEST AND MOST POWERFUL BATTLE-SHIP, THE 26,000-TON GNEI-SENAU, WAS SUNK IN THE SECOND BRITISH AIR RAID ON WILHELMSHAVEN YESTERDAY.

Germany has only two battleships, the remaining one being the Scharnhorst, which is of slightly earlier design.

The Gneisenau was launched on December 8, 1936—less than three years ago, and in some respects was one of the most powerful battleships afloat outside the British Navy.

Rome, Sept. 6.

While war news still dominates the morning papers, there is a clear indication that Italy is turning her attention to her own affairs and is less bellicose. It is interesting to find that the Popolo di Roma gives several columns of its front page to the Annual Report made to Mussolini of the results of Italian agriculture obtained in 1938 and 1939. The R.A.F.

ET US take a look at this Royal Air Force whose "paper bulleta" dropped over a wide area in Germany will have a more devastating effect on the Hitler regime than all the bombs it is enpable of hurling on German heads.

How does it stand now in men and machines? The answer will encourage the Democracies. Britons have every reason to take comfort in our air strength.

From 1935 to early 1937 Ger-man bombers were superior to those of the R.A.F. in speed, range and bomb foad. To-day Britain's latest aircraft surpass the corresponding German types in both flying range and bomb load.

> The speeds of the two are said to be about the same, but the operational value of the British machine is far superior.

The Wellington is the most efficient two-engined bomber in the world to-day. Filled with petrol in place of bombs it could fly non-stop from England to Australia. The range of the first model, loaded with bombs, is 3,240 miles; its speed 265 miles an hour.

But warplanes in R.A.F. squadrons are only the forerunners of still better ones which are already appearing in very large numbers.

The disclosed performances of British bombers at present are of each about 1,000 horse-power. Parts of a spy's work is the obtain-More powerful engines are in the new types of machines. It Means a Lot to be FIRST LORD his own wireless station.

The salary probably seems attractive to you, but a good First Lord earns and spends every penny of it. He is the representative of the Navy in Parliament, responsible for the direction and supervision of all naval matters, with power to promote and discharge, recommend honours and awards.

He is very much of the Boss of the British Navy. His responsibility is so great that he has a little Cabinet of his own, the Board of Admiralty, to advise and direct him. Though he is not compelled to take the Board's advice-he usually does. On the Board sit Britain's Sea Lords-first, second, third, fourth, and the recently appointed fifth—the big executives of the Navy.

Even in the Cabinet his position is enviable . . . he is one of the most powerful of Ministers.

In Room 40

The house that goes with the job is a much finer place than either No. 10 or No. 11, Downing-street. It stands at the south-east corner of the Admiralty building in Whitehall. Its rooms are spacious and beautifully furnished. The drawing-room has unique furniture-chairs, tables, couches with legs and arms carved in the shape of dolphins. Lord Nelson's body once rested

A connecting door links the house with the Admiralty itself. The First Lord has access to every room in this, London's most exciting building. There is Room 40, for instance, the eyes and ears of the world.

Here cipher wireless messages, intercepted from the enemy, were decoded during the war. To-day the Admiralty's most trusted and talented men sit there, linked by radio with the ships and ports of the seven seas. Messages, secret and confidential, pass through their hands. They are just a few of the First Lord's 4,000 staff.

There is the superb Admiralty library, too, if the First, Lord feels like reading. Not ordinary reading, though. A hundred thousand books and documents giving details of almost every naval engagement ever fought. Charts and maps and plans to bewilder you.

His Yacht

And if you want to get away from the stuffy air of Whitehall there is the yacht already mentioned. It is a a long-standing tradition that the First Lord is free to use the yacht as he wishes in the performance of his duties.

The Exchantress is finer than any rich man's ship. It is the Admiralty affoat, equipped, as the cinema posters say, "regardless of expense."

The First Lord has a busy job. There are dinners, banquets, luncheons to preside at, speeches to make and naval manoeuvres to attend. There are admirals to interview and inventions to be considered. There is the all-important question of the £ s d of running the Navy. And, finally, there is the task of telling Parliament and, through Parliament, the people all about it.

Members delight in asking difficult questions about the Navy. The First Lord has to answer them.

At The Gates Of Paris

Anniversary Of The Marne

It was on the morning of Sunday, September 6, 1914, that Paris knew that something had happened which would decide the fate of the war.

For three days von Kluck's Army had been within striking distance of the capital; for three days we had waited for the sound of gunfire from the forts, signifying that the attack had begun. And now it was not coming; it was quite clear that it was not coming. Gallieni's brief communique, collected late on Saturday night from the Press Bureau in the Rue de Grenelle, had run as follows:--The German Army is still moving nway from Paris and continuing the movement entered on two days ago. It follows from the information received that the enemy's troops have evacuated the Complegue-Sentis dis-

We had known nothing about the movement away from Paris, but that made the news all the more decisive. Something had happened. The Ger-man Army, which a week before had been in full march through Compiegne and Senlis for the gates of Paris, had found something to take it elsewhere. "Ah," said the street gossips, "nous verrons, nous verrons, blentot quelque chose. Paris in those days lay as though hypnotized. The terrible reality of the invasion and come upon it so swiftly as to be almost unrealizable. The writer, then a member of the Paris staff of The Times, had left France about August 20 for a short visit to England. Fighting on the Belgian frontier was then still confined to skirmishes. The name Mons was still unfamiliar. A short ten days Inter, on Sunday, August 30, he returned to France.

The train from Boulogne was four hours late in starting and the chef de gare would not guarantee that it would get to Paris, Before it had reached Abbeville it was crowded to roof and doorstep with refugees from Belgium, from Lille, from every town in the Pas-de-Calals, soldiers and civilians together. It took 10 hours to reach Paris. Crowds were gathered at every little railway station and level crossing through Normandy to ask for news from the north as the train rolled slowly by. All through the night, at one junction after another, we were held up to let troop-train after troop-train pass, all moving south.

In Peris everything was in a hubbub. Everybody seemed to be leaving. The railway stations at the Quai d'Orsay and Montparnasse were packed with helpless crowds, struggling for places in the trains. People poured on to the river steamers, and left without knowing where they would get to. It was swelteringly hot. No one knew where the Germans were. The official news placed them at Noyon, but a chance acquaintance who had come that morning from Complegue testifled to having seen British sappers blow up the stonebridge over the Olse. That meant that the retreat was still in progress. and Complegne was only 30 miles.

TENDER REUNIONS

First Visitors' Day At Internment Camp

There were scenes of tender and grateful reunion of La Salle College yesterday when, for the first time, the internment comp was opened to visitors. In the period from 5 to 6.30 p.m. approximately 200 visited the camp's 92 inmates.

There were about 50 clustered inside the barbed wire fence by the time the visiting period began and these were escorted up the college drive by guards. A dozen nationalities were represented in the crowd. for the wives, sisters, and children of the internees were supported by friends of other nationalities.

They became clustered in the entrance hall as three officers rapidly inspected the parcels they carried These consisted of baskets, ports. brown-paper parcels, bundles of clothing, and piles of magazines and books, A few newspapers, which are forbidden, and alcoholic drinks were confiscated.

Another period of congestion occurred on the floor above while the names and addresses of the visitors were taken, and then they were allowed to meet the internees in the halls and dining room on the first floor. The process will be simplified on future occasions, the names and addresses of most prospective visitors having now been taken.

Fervent Reunions

There were fervent reunions in the dining hall, suggesting that husbands and their wives and familles had been parted for months rather than for a few days; but there was no empty lamenting and there were more smiles than tears. The womenfolk were obviously resigned to the inevitable, and the internees were appreciative of the gentle discipline the Rhineland industrial centres of Commandant Major I. D. S. At present they rise at 7 a.m. Roll call, by their numbers, is taken at 8.15 a.m. and breakfast follows. There is an inspection of their sleeping quarters at 10 a.m. and they are allowed outdoor recreation from 11 to 12.30. At noon the Commandant hears any complaints or suggestions they have to make. Timn is at 12.30 and from then until 4 p.m. the Internees keep to their dormitory, reading and playing chess of cards. Though Aryan and non-Aryan sections have been formed the internees mix frely at this and ! at all other times. There another recreation period from 4.30 to 6 p.m., when a last meal is taken. The roll is called again at 8 p.m. and "light out" is at 10.15.

New Procedure To-day

A new order will begin at the to-day when internees will cook their own meals. In this respect they are fortunate to have in their number two young Hungarian -cooks, a former Hongkong maitre reasonable rations, the Hongkong & creased to 72.—Reuter Bulletin. Shanghai Hotels will continue to provide plain, but ample food. The internees have already organised for all duties connected with the preparation and service of their meals and the cleaning up afterwards.

From to-day the spacious school theatre, with its stage and plane, will be made available to the internees, who include many capable musicians. Yesterday a canteen was opened in the theatre, which will be "wet" from 5 to 5.45 p.m., heer being the only alcoholic drink available. Each internce will be allowed a limit of $10 a week from his confiscated resources for canteen purchases. The theatre can be used for recreation in wet weather-

Internees are responsible for the cleanliness of the dormitory and of their own belongings, Chinese labour not being used for this purpose. A washroom where clothing hung drying indicated yesterday that many of them had already been busy washing.

Future Visiting Hours

· Visiting hours have now been fixed at from 5 to 5.30 p.m. on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Visitors arriving at the outside gate later enemy forces to the south-west.than 5.30 p.m. are liable to be refused admission. At present neivspapers may not be taken in, though this ruling may eventually be recluding beer, be taken in.

Porsons outside are requested not to telephone to internees; only in exceptional cases will such calls be accepted. Internees will also be permitted to make telephone calls only in exceptional circumstances.

Both came recently from Tientain with a party of Italians. Larcher visited the girl's room and two shots were heard. Friends who rushed in found Larcher and the girl wounded. They removed Larcher to a third floor room and sent two Chinese hotel boys to guard the floor, the girl being sent to hospital. Wang's Comment

Shanghai, Sept. 6. Commenting on the outbreak of the second European war, Mr. Wang Ching-wel, leader of the Chinese peace movement, in a signed article published by the Chung Hwa Jih Pao to-day, declares that the present conflict in Europe should be attributed to intrigues by the Soviet Union. Immediately responsible for the outbreak of the European war, ancording to the Chinese leader, is the conclusion of the Soviet-German non-aggression pact. Referring to Japan's decision to remain neutral in connection with the European war, Mr. Wang Chingwel believes it possible for Japan to align herself with Britain and France, while he also believes Italy will eventually side with the anti-German front because she is opposed to Communism.—Domei.

American View

Washington, Sept. 0. Japan's neutrality declaration, which runs parallel with the policies of Russia and the United States, has impressed the authorities, who are assured that Asia will not be involved in the European conflict and hope that the war will be localised to Europe.

The factors which are regarded as contributing to Japan's neutrality are the Russo-German Pact, which left the Soviet free and a more potential danger to Japan, and Japan's preoccupation in the China conflict. The authorities hope that the latter factor alone will be a virtually sufficient basis for Japan to avoid further hostilities.

Observers contrast Japan's present position with the World War when she participated as an ally of Britain. Some experts still believe that Japan and Britain will in the future reach a new accord which, if only a short alliance, will nevertheless readjust and harmonise their mutual. interesta in Asia.

A.R. DALLAH, LEADING 20-10, BEATEN

21-20 IN LAWN BOWLS FINAL

Magnificent Recovery By U.M. Omar But He Was Lucky To Win

With due respect to U. M. Omar's fine fighting finish, I am sure many people who saw the game will agree that he was very lucky to beat A. R. Dallah in the final of the Open Bowls Singles Championship of the Colony on the Club de Recreio green yesterday. Trailing 10-20 on the 14th head, he finally won 21-20 after as magnificent a recovery as has over been seen in the tournament-aided and abetted by a few atrocious mistakes by Dallah.

consecutive successful heads, and to lead 20-10, Dallah was playing so well that he seemed to have the match in his pocket. He was cutplaying Omar in every department at this stage and I am sure there were many. people who thought, as I did, that a victory for him was just a matter of time. What made this impression all the stronger was the fact that Omar had lost his sense of weight and was always that yard through or short.

But there was a surprise for all. On the 15th end, Dallah, leading 20-10, was lying one when Omar had his last wood to roll. The latter took a desperate chance with a drive. He could have drawn, for Dallah's shot was in a perfect position for a rest; but probably he could not rely on a As it happened, his gamble came off and with the two he got on this head new courage, and it was now his 18th and 19th lighds. turn to dominate the play. He scored another two on the 16th end, followed by a single on the next.

A BAD BLUNDER

Dallah, in my opinion, made his biggest blunder of the match. When he had his last wood to roll, Omar was lying three round the jack, with his fourth wood wide by the side. Dallah was lying fourth with two back woods. He, therefore, had nothing to lose by taking a "erack" of the history of at the lack. If he carried the kitty, the champlonship. They had the moment there is some mand at the moment there is some m he half his back woods to receive it; if he did not hit the jack, there was a good chance of taking out one or two of Omar's shot woods; or even by head: If he had missed jack and woods, he would not have given away more than three. Instead, Dallah preferred to draw, ignoring the fact that it needed a very good shot indeed to save, let alone take first shot. A heavy wood, in my view, was certainly called for inasmuch as he could allow for a greater margin of error. As it was, Dallah went slightly narrow although he had the perfect weight, and his wood awung across the green. With the three he obtained here, Omar was now only two shots behind, 18-20.

If the 18th head was a had one for Dallah, the 19th was even worse, for on this end he conceded another three to lose the match. Omar was short with his first wood, but drew two beauties with his second and third, while Dallah, heavy with his first, was narrow with second and third. Omar tried to block with his fourth, but failed and the position when Dallah had the last wood was this, Omar was lying two, Dalinh had third and two back woods.

UNFORTUNATE ENDING

Then in playing a pound-on shot, Dallah went wide and had the mortifleation of seeing it cut Omar's front wood in for the third shot, which

Indeed, when he recovered from gave the latter the match. It was a 2-8 deficit to lead 17-8 after seven an unfortunate ending for Dallah, but in a way he only had himself to later scored a three on the 14th head become so tight. The R.A.F.

T ET US take a look at this Royal Air Force whose "paper bullets". dropped over a wide area in Germany will have a more devastating effect on the Hitler regime than all j the hombs it is capable of hurling on German heads.

How does it stand now in men and machines? The answer will encourage the Democratics, Britons have every reason to take comfort in our air strength.

From 1935 to early 1937 Gerto the second se those of the R.A.F. in speed, range and bomb load, To-day Britain's latest aircraft surpass the corresponding German types in both flying range and bomb load.

The speeds of the two are said to be about the same, but the operational value of the British machine is far superior.

The Wellington is the most world to-day. Filled with petrol in place of bombs it could fly non-stop the country in which they are about 5 of the troops (incidentally, in many cases it had this effect) but was a over the city and dropped some source of knowledge of the movefrom England to Australia. The salary probably seems attractive to you, but a. good First Lord earns and spends every penny of it. He is the representative of the Navy in Parliament, responsible for the direction and supervision of all naval matters, with power to promote and discharge, recommend honours and awards.

He is very much of the Boss of the British Navy. . His responsibility is so great that he has a little Cabinet of his own, the Board of Admiralty, to advise and direct him. Though he is not compelled to take the Board's advice-he usually does. On the Board sit Britain's Sea Lords-first, second, third, fourth, and the recently appointed fifth—the big executives of the Navy.

Even in the Cabinet his position is enviable... he is one of the most powerful of Ministers.

The house that goes with the job is a much finer place than either No. 10 or No. 11, Downing-street. It stands at the south-east corner of the Admiralty building in Whitehall. Its rooms are spacious and beautifully furnished. The drawing-room has unique furniture-chairs, tables, couches with legs and arms carved in the shape of dolphins. Lord Nelson's body once rested

A connecting door links the house with the Admiralty itself. The First Lord has access to every room in this, London's most exciting building. There is Room 40, for instance, the eyes and ears of the world.

Here cipher wireless messages, intercepted from the enemy, were decoded during the war. To-day the Admiralty's most trusted and talented men sit there, linked by radio with the ships and ports of the seven seas. Messages, secret and confidential, pass brough their hands. They are just a few of the First Lord's 4,000

There is the superb Admiralty library, too, if the Tir. t. Lord feels like reading. Not ordinary reading, though. A nundred thousand books and documents giving details of almost every naval engagement ever fought. Charts and maps and plans to bewilder you.

His Yacht

And if you want to get away from the stuffy air of Whitehall there is the yacht already mentioned. It is a a long-standing tradition that the First Lord is free to use the yacht as he wishes in the performance of his

The Exchantress is finer than any rich man's ship. It is the Admiralty affoat, equipped, as the cinema posters say, "regardless of expense."

The First Lord has a busy job. There are dinners, banquets, luncheons to preside at, speeches to make and naval manoeuvres to attend. There are admirals to interview and inventions to be considered. There is the all-important question of the £ s d of running the Navy. And, finally, there is the task of telling Parliament and, through Parliament, the people all about it.

Members delight in asking difficult questions about the Navy The First Lord has to answer them.

At The Gates Of Paris

Anniversary Of The Marne

It was on the morning of Sunday, September 6, 1914, that Paris knew that something and happened which would decide the fate of the war. For three days von Kluck's Army had been within striking distance of the capital; for three days we had walted for the sound of gunfire from the forts, signifying that the attack had begun. And now it was not coming; it was quite clear that it was not coming. Galileni's brief communique, collected late on Saturday night from the Press Bureau in the Rue de Grenelle, had run as follows:— The German Army is still moving laway from Parls and continuing the imovement entered on two days ago. It follows from the information recelved that the enemy's troops have evacuated the Complegue-Senlis dis-

We had known nothing about the movement away from Paris, but that made the news all the more decisive. Something had happened. The German Army, which a week before had been in full march through Compiegne and Senlis for the gates of Paris, had found something to take 'it elsewhere. "Ah," said the street , gossips, "nous verrons, nous verrons, blenfot quelque chose." Paris in those days lay as though hypnotized. The terrible reality of the invasion had come upon it so swiftly as to be almost unrealizable. The writer, then a member of the Paris staff of The Times, bad left France about August 20 for a short I visit to England. Fighting on the Belgian frontier was then still confined to skirmishes. The name Mons was still unfamiliar. A short ten I days later, on Sunday, August 30, he lieturned to France. The train from Boulogne was four | hours late in starting and the chef de gare would not guarantee that it would get to Paris. Before it had reached Abbeville it was lerowded to roof and doorstep with refugees from Belgium, from Lille, from every town in the Pas-de-Calais, | | soldiers and, civilians together. | It took 19 hours to reach Paris. Crowds [were gathered at every little railway station and level crossing through Normandy to ask for news from the north as the train rolled slowly by. All through the night, at one junction after another, we were held up to let troop-train after troop-train pass, all' I moving south.

In Paris everything was in a hubbub. Everybody seemed to be leaving. The railway stations at the Quai | d'Orsay and Montparnasse were packed with helpless crowds, struggling for places in the trains. People poured on to the river steamers, and left without knowing where they would get to. It was swelteringly hot. No one knew where the Germans were, The official news placed them at Noyon, but a chance acquaintance who had come that morning from Complegne testifled to having seen British suppers blow up the stone bridge over the Oise. That meant that the retreat was still in progress, and Complegne was only 30 miles

A new order will begin at the to-day when internees will cook their own meals. In this respect they are fortunate to have in their number two young Rüngarian cooks, a former Hongkong maitre d'hotel, and a cafe host. Under reasonable rations, the Hongkong & Shanghai Hotels will continue to provide plain, but ample food. The internees have already organised for all duties connected with the preparation and service of their meals and the cleaning up afterwards. From to-day the spacious school theatre, with its stage and piane, will be made available to the internees, who include many capable musicians. Yesterday a canteen was opened in the theatre, which will be "wel" from 5 to 5.45 p.m., beer being the only alcoholie drink available. Each internee will be allowed a limit of $10 a week from his confiscated resources for eanteen purchases. The theatre can be used for recreation in wel weather.

Internees are responsible for the 'cleanliness of the dormitory and of their own belongings, Chinese labour not being used for this purpose. A washroom where clothing hung drying indicated yesterday that many of them had already been busy washing.

Future Visiting Hours

Visiting hours have now been fixed at from 5 to 5.30 p.m. on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Visitors arriving at the outside gate later than 5.30 p.m. are liable to be refused admission. At present newspapers may not be taken in, though this ruling may eventually be relaxed; nor may alcoholic drinks, including beer, be taken in,

A.R. DALLAH, LEADING 20-10, BEATEN 21-20 IN LAWN BOWLS FINAL

Magnificent Recovery By U.M. Omar But He Was Lucky To Win'

HONGKONG TELEGRAPH

With due respect to U. M. Omar's fine fighting finish, I am sure many people who saw the game will agree that he was very lucky to beat A. R. Dallah in the final of the Open Bowls Singles Championship of the Colony on the Club de Recreio green yesterday. Trailing 10-20 on the 14th head, he finally won 21-20 after as magnificent a recovery as has ever been seen in the tournament-aided and abetted by a few atrocious mistakes by Dallah.

a 2-8 deficit to lead 17-8 after seven consecutive successful heads, and later scored a three on the 14th head to lead 20-10, Dallah was playing to the odds were a dollar to a lemon well that he seemed to have the match in his pocket. He was outplaying first time, but he failed to seize his Omar in every department at this i stage and I am sure there were many people who thought, as I did, that a splendid bowler as Dallah is bound to go far; but I make bold to go far; but I make bold always that yard through or short.

On the 15th end, Dallah, leading 20-10, was lying one when Omar had his last wood to roll. The latter took [, new courage, and it was now his 18th and 19th heads. followed by a single on the next.

was lying three round the jack, with other. his fourth wood wide by the side. Dallah was lying fourth with two back woods. He, therefore, had nothing to lose by taking a "crack" at the jack. If he carried the kitty the championship. Never before has he had his back woods to receive it; the margin of one shot separated the if he did not hit the jack, there was a good chance of taking out one or two of Omar's shot woods; or even by If he had missed jack and woods, he would not have given away more than three, Instead, Dallah preferred to draw, ignoring the fact that it needed a very good shot indeed to save, let alone take first shot. A heavy wood, in my view, was certainly called for insanuch as he could allow for a greater margin of error. As it was, Dallah went; slightly narrow although he had the perfect weight, and his wood swung! across the green. With the three hel obtained here. Omar was now only two shots behind, 18-20.

If the 18th head was a had one for Dallah, the 19th was even worse, for on this end he conceded another three to lose the match. Omar was short with his first wood, but drew two beauties with his second and third, while Dallah, heavy with his first, was narrow with second and third. Omar tried to block with his fourth, but failed and the position when Dallah had the last wood was this, Omar was lying two, Dallah had third and two back woods.

UNFORTUNATE ENDING

Then in playing a pound-on shot, Dallah went wide and had the mortifleation of seeing it cut Omar's front

Indeed, when he recovered from gave the latter the match. It was victory for him was just a matter of time. What made this impression all near future, he is not likely to have the stronger was the fact that Omar, the same chance of winning as comhad lost his sense of weight and was fortably as he should have done yes-

But there was a surprise for all. He had victory in his grasp, only to let it go again.

U. M. Omar yesterday set up a local lawn bowls record which may never be equalled when he won the Colony singles title for the fourth time by beating A. R. Mr. Alfred Robinson, a plumber, who was watching the game said: "One man had just thrown and Knowles was walking up when suddenly there was a blazing light. Knowles seemed to explode, . His clothing flete all over the place. It was the worst lightning I have ever seen." In several places near where Knowles had been walking the turf was cut as though by a knife. How does it stand now in men and machines? The answer will encourage the Democracies, Britons have every reason to take comfort in our air strength.

From 1935 to early 1937 German hombers were superior to those of the R.A.F. in speed, range and bomb load. To-day Britain's latest aircraft surpass the corresponding German types in both flying range and bomb load.

The speeds of the two are said to be about the same, but the operational value of the British machine is far superior.

He is the representative of the Navy in Parliament, responsible for the direction and supervision of all naval matters, with power to promote and discharge, recommend honours and awards. He is very much of the Boss of the British Navy. His responsibility is so great that he has a little Cabinet of his own, the Board of Admiralty, to advise and direct him. Though he is not compelled to take the Board's advice—he usually does. On the Board sit Britain's Sea Lords-first, second, third, fourth, and the recently appointed fifth—the big executives of the Navy.

Even in the Cabinet his position is enviable . . . he is one of the most powerful of Ministers.

In Room 40

The house that goes with the job is a much finer place than either No. 10 or No. 11, Downing-street. It stands at the south-east corner of the Admiralty building in Whitehall. Its rooms are spacious and beautifully furnished. The drawing-room has unique furniture-chairs, tables, couches with legs and arms carved in the shape of dolphins. Lord Nelson's body once rested

A connecting door links the house with the Admiralty itself. The First Lord has access to every room in this, London's most exciting building. There is Room 40, for instance, the eyes and ears of the world.

Here eigher wireless messages, intercepted from the enemy, were decoded during the war. To-day the Admiralty's most trusted and talented men sit there, linked by radio with the ships and ports of the seven seas. Messages, secret and confidential, pass through their hands. They are just a few of the First Lord's 4,000 staff.

There is the superb Admiralty library, too, if the First, Lord feels like reading. Not ordinary reading, though. A hundred thousand books and documents giving details of almost every naval engagement ever fought. Charts and maps and plans to bewilder you.

His Yacht

And if you want to get away from the stuffy air of Whitehall there is the yacht already mentioned. It is a a long-standing tradition that the First Lord is free to use the yacht as he wishes in the performance of his

The Exchantress is finer than any rich man's ship. It is the Admiralty affoat, equipped, as the cinema posters say, "regardless of expense."

The First Lord has a busy job. There are dinners, banquets, luncheons to preside at, speeches to make and naval manoeuvres to attend. There are admirals to interview and inventions to be considered. There is the all-important question of the £ s d of running the Navy. And, finally, there is the task of telling Parliament and, through Parliament, the people all about it.

Anniversary Of The Marne

It was on the morning of Sunday, September 6, 1914, that Parls knew that something had happened which would decide the fate of the war. For three days von Kluck's Army had been within striking distance of the expital; for three days we had waited for the sound of gunfire from the forts, signifying that the attack had begun. And now it was, not coming; it was quite clear that it was not coming. Gallient's brief communique, collected late on Saturday night from the Press Bureau in the Rue de Grenelle, had run as

The German Army is still moving away from Paris and continuing the movement entered on two days ago. It follows from the information received that the enemy's troops have evacuated the Complegae-Sentis dis-

We had known nothing about the movement away from Paris, but that made the news all the more decisive. Something had happened. The German Army, which a week before had been in full march through Complegne and Senlis for the gates of Paris, had found something to take it elsewhere, "Ah," said the street rgossips, "nous verrons, nous verrons, blentot quelque chose."

Paris in those days lay as though hypnotized. The terrible reality of the invasion had come upon it so swiftly as to be almost unrealizable. The writer, then a member of the Paris slaff of The Times, had left France about August 20 for a short visit to England. Fighting on the Helgian frontier was then still confixed to skirmishes. The name Mons Was still unfamiliar. A short ten days later, on Sunday, August 30, he returned to France.

The train from Boulogne was four hours late in starting and the chef de gare would not guarantee that it would get to Paris. Before it had reached Abbeville it was crowded to roof and doorstep with refugees from Belgium, from Lille, from every town in the Pas-de-Calais, soldiers and civilians together. It took-19 hours to reach Paris. Crowds were gathered at every little railway station and level crossing through Normandy to ask for news from the north as the train rolled slowly by. All through the night, at one junction after another, we were held up to let troop-train after troop-train pass, all moving south. In Paris everything was in a hub-

bub. Everybody seemed to be leaving. The railway stations at the Quai d'Orsay and Montparnasse were packed with helpless crowds, struggling for places in the trains. People poured on to the river steamers, and left without knowing where they would get to. It was swelteringly hot. No one knew where the Germans were. The official news placed them at Noyon, but a chance acquaintance who had come that morning from Complegne testified to having seen British suppers blow up the stone bridge over the Oise. That meant that the retreat was still in progress, and Complegne was only 30 miles

SECOND RAID ON WILHELMSHAVEN CLAIMS GNEISENAU AS VICTIM

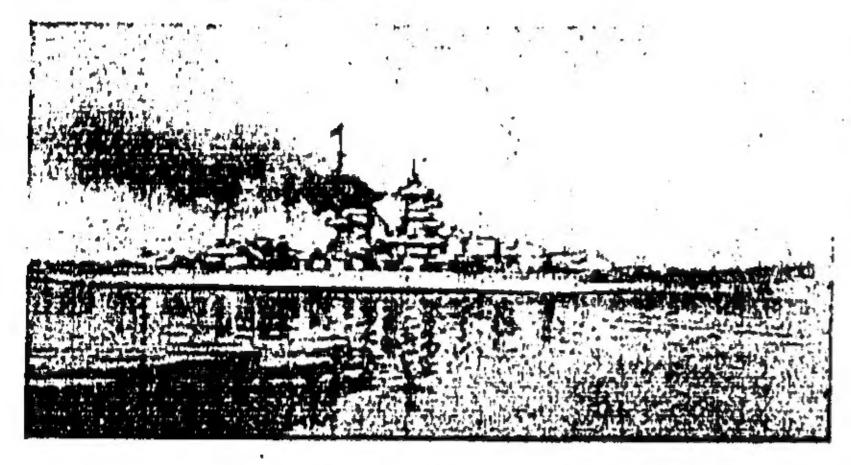

Special To The "Telegraph"

PARIS, SEPT. 7 (UP).-GERMANY'S BIGGEST AND AZI PARIS MOST POWERFUL BATTLE-SHIP, THE 26,000-TON GNEI-SENAU, WAS SUNK IN THE SECOND BRITISH AIR RAID ROULS CON WILHELMSHAVEN YESTERDAY.

Germany has only two battleships, the remaining one being the Scharnhorst, which is of slightly earlier design.

The Gneisenau was launched on December 8, 1936—less than three years ago, and in some respects was one of the most powerful battleships afloat outside the British Navy. The ship, which was laid down at the Wilhelmshaven Naval Yards in 1934, took over two years to build.

THE GERMAN BATTLESHIP CHEISENAU

It was originally supposed, when the Gneisenau and Scharnhorst were laid down, that they were to be of the Deutschland "pocket" battleship design. Actually, they were found to be of a new and much more formidable type.

A.R. DALLAH, LEADING 20-10, BEATEN 21-20 IN LAWN BOWLS FINAL

Magnificent Recovery By U.M. Omar But He Was Lucky To Win

With due respect to U. M. Omar's fine fight-ing finish, I am sure many people who saw the game will agree that he was very lucky to beat A. R. Dallah in the final of the Open Bowls Singles Championship of the Colony on the Club de Recreio green yesterday. Trailing 10-20 on the 14th head, he finally won 21-20 after as magnificent a recovery as has ever been seen in the time by beating A. R. Dallah 21-20 after one of the best matches in the bistournament-aided and abetted by a few atrocious mistakes by Dallah.

Such a splendid bowler as Dallah

When he led 20-10, to lead 20-10. Dallah was playing so the odds were a dollar to a lemon, well that he seemed to have the match that he would win the title for the in his packet, the was outplaying first time, but he failed to seize his Omar in every department at this stage and I am sure there were many people who thought, as I did, that a victory for him was, just a matter of in winning the championship in the time. What made this impression all near futine, he is not likely to have the stronger was the fact that Omar the same chance of winning as comhad lost his sense of weight and was fortably as he should have done yesalways that yard through or short.

Never before has he had his back woods to receive it; the margin of one shot separated the if he did not hit the jack, there was a good chance of taking out one or two of Omar's that woods; or even by head: if he had missed jack and woods, he would not have given away more than three. Instead, Dallah preferred to draw, ignoring the fact that it needed a very good shot indeed to save, let alone take first shot. A heavy wood, in my view, was certainly called for inasmuch as he could allow for a greater margin of error. As it was, Dallah went slightly narrow although he had the per(cet weight, and his wood swung across the green. With the three he obtained here, Omar was now only two shots behind, 18-20.

If the 18th head was a bad one for Dallah, the 19th was even worse, for on this end he conceded another three to lose the match. Omar was short with his first wood, but drew two beauties with his second and third, while Dallah, heavy with his first, was narrow with second and third. Omar tried to block with his fourth, but failed and the position when Dallah had the last wood was this, Omar was lying two, Dallah had third and two back woods.

UNFORTUNATE ENDING

A. R. Dallah, when leading 20-10 on the 14th head against U. M. Omar, seemed to have victory within his grasp yesterday; but he was defeated finally by 21-20.—Staff Photographer.

He of the men will have to be drawn in the fourth three-thus setting a record the war waz-not on. AT THE GATES OF PARIS

frest each more terribly significant than the last, this placed and unraffled existence was singularly restful. Here we were within sense and round of two great armies at grips with one another, yet it was difficult to believe that anything exciting or have the prices increased so greatly abnormal was afoot. Paris seemed slace the beginning of the month? It asleep, Subconsciously every one was waiting for the storm to break, but, as it happens in moments of teat crisis, time seemed to be standing still, while the gods pondered !

The best sign was that there was no hint of Paris being cut off from the coast. The Germans had occupied Amiens, but they had not reached the Siene. What they were doing we could not understand. Then came the official news that they moving away from Paris, and at last opinion, other than to point out that no ernment under the above-named it dayned on us that the assault for which we had been waiting in dread was not going to take place. Then came rumours of the fighting. greengroeer and the milkman had it that a big battle was going on near Meaux, only 15 miles nway. The fort at Claye had fired its guns. The Germans had built a bridge across the Marne; it had been destroyed by gunfire, and hundreds of them had been drowned. Things were going well, so they said. Then another report passed from mouth to mouth. All the taxicabs, it was said, had been taken to rush troops to the front-regulationed in the street-the pelice had done it by order from Gallieni's hendquarters. It was true; not a taxi was to be found. Things were evidently getting hot out there. ,

THE BATTLE WON

Next morning the writer and another British Journalist obtained a pass to go from Paris to Dijon by car. We had no Intention of going to Dijon. That was merely a device to get outside the gates. Once well away from Paris, the big Rolls-Royce was turned north, and presently, by a series of minor stratagents and a stroke or two of good luck, we found ourselves on the hills above Meaux.

Here the situation was plain at a glance. The fields all around were littered with the debris of a day-old battle. Rifles, entrenching tools, bits of equipment, lay about the roads,: and here and there the dead bodies of many of those brave tirailleurs who had marched gaily through Paris four days before. But the buttle had been won. The Germans were already three miles away beyond the further ridge being pounded by French artillery beside us on the hill, and the infantry could be seen through field-glasses going steadily forward. Down in the valley below, helf-submerged in the river, lay a limousine with the drowned bodies of three German officers. It was obviously a patrol which had attempted a daring reconnulssance on the flank of the Allied Atmy, and had met its fate the night before trying to rejoin the German forces. The car had tried to cross the Marne by a bridge which had been blown up, and had plunged straight into the river. That littletragedy seemed to us to embody the failure of the whole German cam-

The official bulletins, talling of the prisoners and guns captured, and the Aisne, chine days later, and the importance of the victory of the Marne was only gradually revealed, but, meanwhile, all Paris knew by instinct that France was saved, and woke from its spell.

TENDER REUNIONS

First Visitors' Day At Internment Camp

There were scenes of tender and grateful reunion at La Salle College yesterday when, for the first time, the internment camp was opened to visitors. In the period from 5 to 6.30 p.m. approximately 200 visited the comp's 92 inmates. There were about 50 clustered in-side the barbed wire fence by the time the visiting period began and London, these were escorted up the college. Over a drive by guards. A dozen nation-

These consisted of baskets, ports, brown-paper parcels, bundles of clothing, and piles of magazines and books. A few newspapers, which are forbidden, and alcoholic drinks of Windsor. were confisented.

Another period of congestion occurred on the floor above while the names and addresses of the visitors were taken, and then they were allowed to meet the internees in the halls and dining room on the first floor. The process will be simplified on future occasions, the names and addresses of most prospective visitors having now been taken.

Fervent Reunions

There were fervent reunions in the dining hall, suggesting that husbands and their wives and families had been parted for months rather than for a few days; but there was no empty lamenting and there were more smiles than tears. The womenfolk were obviously resigned to the inevitable, and the internees were appreciative of the gentle discipline of Commandant Major I. D. S. Gordon and his men.

There were reluctant partings when the end of the visiting period was called at 6.30 p.m., many having fication that the period, would be from 5 to 7 p.m. The younger married couples hung back a little and lingered over embraces that must suffice until Saturday,

A routine for the internces was fixed when the camp opened and is still in force. It allows them a certain amount of freedom, which will probably be amplified as the camp becomes more settled. At present they rise at 7 a.m. Roll call, by their numbers, is taken at 8.15 a.m. and breakfast follows. There is an inspection of their sleeping quarters at 10 a.m. and they are allowed outdoor recreation from 11 to 12.30. At noon the Commandant hears any to make.

Tiffin is at 12.30 and from then until 4 p.m. the internces keep to to have an "independent existence." their dormitory, reading and playing chess of cards. Though Aryan and non-Aryan sections have been form-
